CAVEAT:

If you have been a party to any criminal proceeding; been arrested, summoned, charged with, or convicted of a crime; been confined to a mental, penal, or correctional institution; or if you have undergone mental treatment, your ability to be admitted to the practice of law – even after successful completion of your legal studies and graduation from law school – may be severely limited in one or more states or jurisdictions in which you intend to apply upon graduation.

Any discrepancies discovered after you matriculated could subject you to dismissal from the Law School. Questions asked on the application are also asked by bar examiners; some examiners check these answers against those on the law school applications. Any discrepancies may adversely affect your admission to the bar. If academic action or disciplinary notation have been removed from your undergraduate transcript, such facts should have been disclosed on your application. Full descriptions of these actions or notations, including the reasons for removal, must appear. Of particular importance are juvenile or minor matters for which the court has sealed the records. Many bar examiners take the position that the records are not sealed for purposed of admission to the bar.

If any of the above information changes prior to your graduation, it is your responsibility to notify us.
